This semester, the honors seminar will operate primarily as a writing workshop. Everyone will have the opportunity to present their work to the group three times—at this stage, you should be submitting full or nearly full drafts of chapters for review for your sessions. At most sessions, we will set aside the first part of the class to focus on one aspect of the thesis writing process (introduction, conclusions, etc.). There will also be time every week to pose questions to the group or to seek advice. If you would like feedback on material outside of your regular schedule for review, you may send your material around before the class meeting and we will discuss it if there is time. I am also happy to provide additional feedback.

When you are on schedule to present your writing to the group, please be sure to upload your writing sample to the blackboard site by 5:00 pm on Sunday before the Tuesday session. All students should read the posted submissions before the Tuesday session and should fill out the writing response form before coming to class.

Meeting Schedule:

February 3rd: Welcome Back/Updates

This session will be devoted to hearing updates about what was accomplished over winter term, talking about current challenges, and planning writing schedules for the spring. Please post an update on what you accomplished over Winter Term (including an honest assessment of what you feel the biggest challenges you face at this point in your project are), as well as a detailed proposed writing/revising schedule for your spring semester. These postings should be up on the blackboard site by 10 p.m. on Sunday, February 1st. Keep in mind that theses are due Friday, April 24th. At this session we will establish the semester’s writing presentation schedule.

February 10th: Writing Workshop (Group One)

It’s time to start turning in chapters! Group one, upload a chapter of your thesis to the blackboard site by 5:00 pm on Sunday, February 8th; when you post, be sure to tell us what you would like readers to pay particular attention to as they go over your chapter. Everyone should read the submissions and fill out the writing response form before Tuesday’s class session

February 17th: Writing Workshop (Group 2)
Besides workshopping the writings of Group 2, we will also be discussing what makes for good Introductions in class. Before coming to class, please look at the introductions to three books you have in your room or that you are reading for class. What elements do they all share? How do they differ? What needs to be in your introduction?

February 24: Writing Workshop (Group 3)

March 3: Writing Workshop (Group 1)

The topic for discussion tonight is Conclusions. Before coming to class, please look at the conclusions to three books you have in your room or that you are reading for class. What elements do they share? How do they differ? What needs to be in your conclusion?

March 10: Writing Workshop (Group 2)

March 17: Writing Workshop (Group 3)

The topic for discussion this session is bibliographies and footnotes. Please come to this session with your most pesky footnote questions and for your plans on how you intend to organize your bibliography.

March 31: Writing Workshop (Group 1)

The topic for discussion this session is final editing for repetition, coherency, and style.

April 7: Writing Workshop (Group 2)

The topic for discussion this session is formatting of the thesis.

April 14: Writing Workshop (Group 3)

The topic for discussion this session will be the public honors presentation, which will take place in May.

April 21: Preparing for oral exams

At this session, we will break into smaller groups and each of you will participate in a short mock oral exam.

Friday, April 24: THESES DUE BY 4:00 p.m.—Present copies to your readers by 4 p.m. today

Post-April 28: Celebration/Party—date TBA

Week of May 12: Public Honors Presentations, 12:00-2:00 (Time and Date tentative, place TBA)
