Born in Hungary, Kati Marton has combined a career as a reporter and writer with human rights advocacy. From 2003 to 2008, she chaired the International Women’s Health Coalition, a global leader in promoting and protecting the health and human rights of women and girls, and from 2000 to 2011, she was a member of the board of Human Rights Watch. Marton is currently a director and former chair of the Committee to Protect Journalists. Since 1980, she has published seven books and contributed as a reporter to ABC News, PBS, NPR, the New Yorker, Atlantic Monthly, the Washington Post, the Wall Street Journal, Newsweek, and others. Marton’s Cold War memoir, Enemies of the People—My Family’s Journey to America, was published in 2009 by Simon and Schuster and was a 2010 finalist for the National Book Critics Circle Prize. The New York Times called it “a powerful and absorbing narrative…[with] all the magnetism and yes, the excitement of the very best spy fiction.”

From 1995 until 1997, Marton hosted NPR’s America and the World, a weekly half-hour broadcast on international affairs, and she was involved in the development of NPR’s All Things Considered. She has been widely honored for her writing, reporting, and human rights advocacy.
