American society, politics, and culture have undergone remarkable change in the past half-century, but many issues have proved to be remarkably durable. This course analyzes some of the major trends in recent American history, as well as addressing conflicting interpretations about the meaning of that history. While this course may help explain contemporary America, it is also an exercise in historical understanding apart from presentist concerns.

The class is a mixture of lecture and discussion. Participation in class discussions, based on thoughtful consideration of the readings and the issues, is expected. Class participation may be helpful in resolving borderline grades. The following class periods will be devoted primarily to discussion: Sept. 21 (Black liberation movement), Oct. 5 (Vietnam), Oct. 12 (the Sixties), Nov. 2 (the women’s movement), Nov. 9 (Reagan), Nov. 30 (Bill Clinton and late-century liberalism), and Dec. 7 (Iraq).

WRITING ASSIGNMENTS
There are three writing assignments. The first two are synthetic essays of five or six pages in which you analyze and develop an argument about a specific topic (I'll give you suggested topics). The first is due before fall break. You may write on the Black liberation movement (due Sept. 28), Vietnam (due Oct. 12), or the Sixties (due Oct. 19). The second essay is due during the second third of the class. You may write on the women’s movement (due Nov. 9), Reagan and the new right (due Nov. 16), or queer liberation (due Nov. 30). The final essay (six to eight pages) will ask you to interpret a broader theme running throughout the course. Each essay counts one-third of the final grade.
