onates in my memory, along with Ursula Stechow's charming manner as occasional substitute in the class.

My lasting memory of Oberlin is that of a place where professors were dedicated first of all to teaching and where learning was valued for its own sake.

Life since Oberlin: After Oberlin, I returned to Turkey as a teacher of English Language Learners. Two years later, I came back to the US to marry Paul, clergy in the United Church of Christ, and stayed home with children and volunteer work for 12 years. By then, the field of teaching English Language Learners here in the US was taking root. After 16 stimulating years of teaching K-5 immigrant/sojourner children, I decided to explore what immigrant children (and adults) need to learn in addition to the language of a country, that is, the forms of cultural differences and their impact on education. In retrospect, those were issues I had subconsciously been working on in college; growing up in a different culture presented unexpected consequences. I got my doctorate and taught full time at Boston University in the School of Education until moving to Cape Cod (MA) in 1996. My first book, Your Land, My Land, was published in 1996 by Heinemann. I taught part-time at BU from 2000-2007; in 2003 I wrote my second book, One Classroom, Many Worlds, also published by Heinemann. Currently, volunteering in the local school system and in various church-related groups, traveling to see the world and our children and grandchild, taking courses, attempting some writing projects all create the richness of life in retirement.

Memories of Oberlin:
MEMORIES: A MONTAGE
Nourishing my psyche through bike rides into the flat farmlands around town;
Limping through more courses than I care to remember;
Twisting my tongue around Gilbert and Sullivan librettos;
Encountering quizzical looks from non-Oberlin friends when I mentioned "Libe dates;
Relishing the conversation as much as the coffee at the Snack Bar;
Experiencing an "aha" moment with Prof. Reichard in German 1;
Reaching beyond my musical assumptions in First Church choir under Robert Fountain;
Weaving close, solid friendships that have lasted 54 years;
Walking at night to Johnson House with mist and raindrops glistening on the old-fashioned street lights.

Life since Oberlin: I taught in Cleveland, OH public schools for 2 years. Got married, had 2 daughters: Erica, a scientist and Oberlin grad (’87); Lesley, a cellist. Husband, Nelson, also an Oberlin grad (’62) and violinist/violist. We moved around a lot until 1980 when we settled in Chicago area.

Received MM from U. of IL in 1980. Have a private studio and am still teaching and training teachers in the Suzuki Approach.

Memories of Oberlin: Lots of memories: playing bridge after lunch at Talcott and at Lord Cottage, Mr. Melcher’s music theory class - having to play 4-part harmony and sing any one part at the same time; Salzburg year - my wonderful violin teacher, Filiberto Estrella.

Dining hall dinner dress code: women must wear skirts, men must wear jackets. When our daughter was at Oberlin 25 years later, the dress code was to wear shoes to dinner!
